

COMPLETE GUIDE · BREAK YOUR PLATEAU

THE PATH

Unlock your business and reach the next level, without switching vehicles.

by Beaudelaire · started from zero in Benin

Before you start

the truth nobody told you

You already make money. Your business runs. But for months now, you've been staring at the same numbers, and nothing moves.

It's late. You just finished your day, exhausted. You open your numbers: the same level, again. You gave everything this month, like the month before. You see others winning, posting their car, their freedom, and the thought comes back, quiet: "I work like crazy and I'm stuck. Maybe I'm the problem."

So listen closely, because this matters: you are not the problem.

You were sold generic recipes. Run more ads. Post more content. Lower your prices. Find another product. You tried it all, you did MORE, and you're still in the same place. Of course. Because the problem was never doing more. The problem is doing what's right.

I started with a phone, $0, in Benin, with power cuts and banks slamming the door in my face. I stayed stuck at $5,000 a month for a whole year, exhausted, one step from quitting. What changed everything wasn't working harder. It was finally understanding the real levers, and fixing them one by one.

That's what this book is: the exact path, step by step, to unlock the business you already have and reach the next level. No theory, no fluff. What I wish someone had handed me when I was stuck.

How to read this book. Every step follows the same shape: first your pain (what you actually live), then why you're stuck, then exactly what to do, and finally one action to take today. Don't read it all at once just to "know." Read one step, do the action, move to the next. That's how you actually move.

Part 1

See clearly

Before you push harder, you need to know two things: where you're really stuck, and who you're talking to. Most people skip this part and push into the void for years. Not you.

PART 1

Chapter 1

Pin down where you're really stuck

You do a thousand things a day. You create content, answer messages, follow up, run ads. Lots of activity. Zero progress. You run, but you don't move forward anymore.

Vehicle 1	Translation the scams	$0
Vehicle 2	Managing groups it burns out	$500
Vehicle 3	Video editing the wall (burnout)	$5k
Vehicle 4	Content agency hesitant clients	$10k
Vehicle 5	Affiliate depends on brands	$20k
Vehicle 6	E-commerce the next level	$50k+

My journey: 6 vehicles, 6 levels

Your vehicle is your current field: freelancing, e-commerce, coaching, an agency, video editing, content creation. We're not going to switch it, it's the right one. We're just going to pin down where you are on it, so you know which level you're aiming for and what's holding you back.

The trap. You blame surface stuff: "my videos get no views," "my ads stopped working," "my product sells less," "maybe I charge too much." Those are symptoms. The real lock is deeper: your offer isn't irresistible enough, and you're talking to the wrong client. As long as you tinker with symptoms, you go in circles.

Solution : locate yourself honestly

Grab a sheet and answer, without lying to yourself:

1. Your current level : how much you make a month, really, on average.
2. The level you're aiming for : the next step, not the moon (if you're at 5k, aim for 10k, not 100k).
3. What you've already tried : and that led nowhere.
4. Where it really blocks : not the symptom, the cause: are you short on clients? does your offer not make anyone dream? are you doing everything alone?

The superpower

The trap of the plateau is switching vehicles every three months because "it's not working." You start from zero every time. The ones who break through don't change holes: they dig the same one, deeper. I went through several vehicles before I understood that, and the day I stopped hopping, I started climbing.

Your action today : write one single sentence. "I'm at ____k, I want to reach ____k, and what's really blocking me is ____." Keep it in front of you the whole book.

PART 1

Chapter 2

Who you're really talking to

You want more clients. So you talk to "everyone," to miss no one. And that's exactly why no one turns their head.

When you say "dear entrepreneurs," nobody feels targeted. Nobody thinks "that's me." Your message slides off. But the day you say "you, making 4k and unable to break through for 8 months," that person stops scrolling. They recognize themselves. They listen.

The words they say in their own head: "I'm stuck." · "I'm plateauing." · "I don't know what to do anymore." · "I've tried everything." If your message uses their exact words, it feels like you're reading their mind.

Solution : write your ideal client as a real person

Not a category. A person. Describe:

- Their level : the precise step they're stuck on ("3k, can't get to 10k").
- Their #1 problem, in THEIR words ("I work like crazy and I'm stuck").
- What they've already tried and that failed.
- The result they dream of.
- One fear and one desire that dominate.

Then test it: reread your last post or your offer. Does one specific person think "that's exactly me"? If anyone could say it, you're talking too broad. Rewrite it speaking to them, in the singular: "you who...".

The superpower

You think talking precisely to one person loses the others. It's the opposite. The more precise you are for one, the more the ten next to them recognize themselves too, and the more you can raise your prices, because you become THE solution to a specific problem, not one option among a thousand.

Your action today : rewrite your bio (or the first line of your offer) starting with "You who...".

Part 2

Make your business irresistible

Now that you know where you are and who you're talking to, we hit the core: your offer and your price. This is where 90% of stuck businesses lose the most money, without knowing it.

PART 2

Chapter 3

The offer they can't refuse

If people hesitate to buy from you, you think it's the price. It's almost never the price. It's that your offer isn't desirable enough for the price to become a detail.

Value isn't what YOU put in (100 documents, 50 bonuses). It's what the client PERCEIVES. And their perception rests on four things: two that raise value, two that crush it.

Solution : score your offer on 4 levers (from 1 to 10)

- 1. The dream result : what's the client's true final desire? Not the feature, the dream. (They don't buy the car, they buy arriving.)
- 2. The certainty of getting there : what proof, guarantees, examples make success believable for them?
- 3. The speed : how long before they see a first result? Can you give them a small win within 7 days?
- 4. The effort and sacrifice : what can you carry for them (do it for them, ready-made templates, coaching) so they do as little as possible?

Your lowest score is your bottleneck: work it first. Then stack the value: list every problem your client hits along the way, create a solution for each, bundle it all into one package. And put a guarantee that moves the risk from their shoulders to yours ("refunded if...", "I keep going for free until you get there").

The superpower

The day I stopped selling "my services" and started selling "the next level up, guaranteed," everything changed. People don't buy your product. They buy the result, and the certainty of getting there with you, fast, without breaking their head. Sell that.

Your action today : add a guarantee to your offer. Just one. Watch what it does to your sales.

PART 2

Chapter 4

The perfect price

You think a low price makes you accessible. Wrong. A low price makes you suspicious. You're telling your client, without meaning to: "I'm not sure I can pull this off." And they feel it.

Your price isn't calculated from your costs, or your competitors. It's calculated from what your client gains thanks to you. If you're broke, "500" feels huge and you don't dare. But if your work makes them 5,000, their 500 is a gift.

Solution : price like a pro

- 1. Calculate the real value you create (money earned, time saved, pain avoided). Your price should stay a small fraction of that number.
- 2. Anchor high. Create a "premium" version more expensive than your main offer, and present it first. Next to it, your normal offer looks reasonable.
- 3. Raise it 30% on your next sale, and watch. As long as people keep buying, you were too low.
- 4. Never drop the price: add value. Facing resistance, stack a bonus instead of giving a discount.

The superpower

I tripled my price. I got fewer clients, and four times the revenue. Bonus: clients who take the deal seriously, listen better, get better results, give me better testimonials.

Do you feel like an impostor charging a high price? The impostor is the one who lies, not the one who charges. As long as you tell the truth about what you can do, you have every right to charge what you're worth.

Your action today : decide your next price, +30%. And hold it.

Part 3

Bring them in and convert

You have an irresistible offer and a solid price. Now you need to bring people in, and turn the ones who come into clients. Two skills, two chapters.

The client machine

"I need more clients." No. You need channels. Most businesses depend on a single tap and panic the day it shuts off.

There are only four ways to get clients. Not a fifth:

- The people you already know (you reach out).
- Content (they discover you).
- Cold outreach (you reach out to targeted strangers).
- Ads (you pay to be seen).

Everything else (referrals, affiliates) only amplifies those four.

Solution : build your machine

- 1. Diagnose your 4 channels. Which do you use, which do you ignore? Most people run just one.
- 2. Turn on the warm channel right now (the fastest): list everyone who already gave you permission to contact them (past clients, contacts, followers) and offer them your thing, or ask for a referral.
- 3. Create a gift (a guide, a template, a free audit) so useful your target hands over their contact info. Its value should beat what others charge for.
- 4. Pick ONE second channel and push it hard for 90 days (often content, for a creator) before adding another.

The superpower

The best client magnet: give away for free what others charge for. Look at what it actually costs you to make, usually almost nothing. Everyone wants more clients, but nobody dares give real value for free. Whoever dares pulls a crowd.

Your action today : make three lists, your email contacts, the people you can DM, the numbers in your phone. That's your first prospect list, and it was right under your nose.

Sell without pushing

A sales call isn't a demo of your product. It's a conversation where you get the client to say their problem, what it costs them, and what they want, then you present your offer as the bridge. The sale is won in the diagnosis, not the pitch.

Solution : the call structure that sells without pushing

1. Frame : announce how the call will go.
2. Diagnose : ask open questions: where they are, what they've tried, what's blocking, what they want, and above all what it costs them to change nothing. Listen more than you talk.
3. Bridge : connect THEIR problem to YOUR offer, point by point.
4. The price, then silence. State your price with confidence, no apology, no rambling. Then shut up. Let them think.
5. Objections : "too expensive," "no time" almost always hide a doubt: "will this work for me?" Handle the doubt, not the word. Listen, restate, answer the real problem, confirm.

The superpower

After you name your price, do one thing: shut up. Most people panic, justify, and break their own price before the other person even answers. The first to talk loses. And remember: the one who needs the sale most always loses. Never negotiate when you're desperate, it shows, and it costs you.

Your action today : write your 5 diagnosis questions, the ones you'll ask on every call. Always the same.

Part 4

Make it last

You can attract and convert. What's left is the most important thing for a real jump: making it last. Keeping your clients, getting out of "I do everything myself," and holding on for the long run.

PART 4

Chapter 7

A business, not a job

If you have to find a new client every month just to survive, you don't have a business. You built yourself a job, and the boss is a tyrant.

The real wealth isn't in the first sale. It's in everything a client buys from you over time. Two levers raise it: keeping them longer, and selling them more. A client who stays and rebuys is worth ten you win and then lose.

Solution : turn the one-off sale into a relationship

- 1. Ask yourself: what happens AFTER the result? There's always a next step (maintain, optimize, reach the level above) that justifies ongoing coaching or a subscription.
- 2. Add a logical upsell at the moment of purchase, or a higher tier for those who want to go faster.
- 3. Block the exit with results. Keeping a client costs far less than finding a new one. A small rise in loyalty makes your profits jump.

The superpower

It's the first thing I systematized to break through levels. At a restaurant, you sell a dish once. The real question is: what do you sell the same person next month? Answer that, and your business stops leaking out the bottom.

Your action today : find the "and then?" you can offer a client who just got their result.

PART 4

Chapter 8

Get out of the bottleneck

Your business has a ceiling. That ceiling is you. As long as everything passes through your hands, you can't grow bigger than your own day. You've become the neck of your own bottle.

Solution : remove yourself from the path, methodically

- 1. Audit your week. Write down every task and sort it: "this pays me" or "this drains me."
- 2. Drop first what drains you without paying you. Editing, messages, uploading is $10-an-hour work. And you have a LOT of those tasks. For each one, a single question: do I delegate it to someone, or automate it with AI? Today there are plenty of AIs that do this really well (writing, editing your videos, replying to messages, sorting, creating visuals) without you hiring anyone, and for almost nothing. Your selling and your big clients are $1,000 work: that, you keep, that's you.

3. Document before you delegate. Write the procedure step by step, show an example of "good" and "excellent." If quality only lives in your head, it can't be passed on.

4. Protect your big creation blocks. What truly grows your business happens in long, uninterrupted blocks, never between two meetings. Block your mornings, stack all your meetings into one slot.

The superpower

Delegating isn't finding someone as good as you. It's writing what you do clearly enough that someone else, a person or an AI, can redo it for you. The day I put my procedures down on paper, I stopped being the bottleneck, and the business could finally grow without me.

Your action today : pick ONE task that drains you without paying you, and either hand it off to someone or automate it with AI. Just one, to start.

PART 4

Chapter 9

Go the distance

The only real way to fail in business is to quit. There's no "number one" forever, it's a game that never ends. As long as you keep going, you're still in it. Most people quit over a comment, a bad month, a doubt.

And don't count on your motivation: it comes and goes. A system stays.

Solution : build the machine that moves you forward

- 1. Set fixed slots for your key actions (creating content, calling, selling). Once it's a fixed appointment, you don't have to get motivated, you just do it.
- 2. Automate your money. On every payment, an automatic split: a percentage to savings, one to reinvestment, one for taxes. You decide once, you never re-decide.
- 3. Choose your reference group. The five people you compare yourself to decide your mental ceiling. Compare yourself to people close to your goal, not to those who drag you down.
- 4. Ask the compass question on every decision: "does keeping this in my life raise my odds of reaching my goal?" If not, cut it.

The superpower

The guy posting five videos a day isn't more motivated than you this morning. He has a system that decides for him. Stop forcing willpower. Build the machine, and let the machine work. And above all: keep going when others quit. That's literally the only thing I did more than the ones who gave up.

Your action today : block ONE fixed slot in your calendar this week, and keep it even on the day you don't feel like it.

Part 5

What now?

You have the full map. The same levers I used to go from 0 to $50k+/month. All that's left is applying them to YOUR case.

Let's walk the path together

It's morning. No alarm. You open your phone: sales that dropped overnight, a new client signed without you doing a thing at 3am. Your team already handled the rest. You think back to all those nights you told yourself "maybe this isn't for me"... and a smile rises. Not because it's perfect, but because it's yours. "I'd stopped believing. And yet."

You now have the full plan in your hands. So why go further with coaching?

Because information isn't what you're missing. What you're missing is the order (where to start for YOUR business), the speed (not spending two years fumbling), and someone who's already done it to apply it to your exact situation and tell you when you're going wrong. That's the consulting call. Not the info, you already have it. But walking the path together, in the right order, at the right speed.

What we do on the call. We locate your vehicle and your level, we look at your ideal client, your offer, your price and your client machine, and I tell you exactly what to unlock first to reach your next step.

If you're ready to stop going in circles, book your call. We look at your business together, and we trace your path.
